

Kitten Destruction Rehoming Pressure — Action Checklist

PRINT THIS PAGE AND KEEP IT SOMEWHERE VISIBLE

AUDIT YOUR HOME

- ☐ Identify Destruction Zones: Walk through your home and write down every surface your kitten has scratched, climbed, or chewed without interpreting the behavior—just list what you observe.
- ☐ Remove High-Risk Items: Move fragile objects, valuables, and toxic houseplants out of your kitten's reach or into a closed room to eliminate immediate destruction opportunities.
- ☐ Cover and Secure Cords: Bundle all electrical cords and cover them with cord protectors to prevent chewing hazards and protect your electronics from damage.
- ☐ Use Timeout Spaces: When feeling overwhelmed, place your kitten in a safe room with food, water, and a litter box while you calm yourself down.

INSTALL ALTERNATIVES

- ☐ Place Vertical Sisal Posts: Install tall sisal scratching posts directly next to couch corners and walls where your kitten already scratches to provide an appropriate alternative.
- ☐ Add Horizontal Cardboard Scratcher: Position cardboard scratchers in areas where your kitten performs bunny-kicks and play to redirect that energy toward appropriate surfaces.
- ☐ Position Climbing Alternatives: Set up cat trees or shelves near destroyed vertical spaces like curtains to give your kitten proper climbing outlets.
- ☐ Match Alternatives to Each Zone: Place scratching and climbing options directly adjacent to the exact spots your kitten is destroying, never across the room.

PLAY TO DEplete ENERGY

- ☐ Schedule Three Play Sessions: Plan two to three 15-20 minute interactive wand toy sessions daily to properly tire your kitten before chaos escalates.
- ☐ Use Wand Toys for Real Play: Engage your kitten with wand toys that simulate prey movement rather than letting them entertain themselves with floor toys.

- ☐ End Sessions With Food: Follow each play session with a meal so your kitten associates tiredness with satisfaction and naturally falls asleep afterward.
- ☐ Reframe Destruction as Unmet Need: Remind yourself that scratching, climbing, and chewing are your kitten's biological drives, not personal attacks on your home.
